Things Permissible in the Prayer

Permissible in the Prayer

It is recommended to place a sutrah (barrier) in front of oneself while praying.

If someone attempts to pass in front of the worshipper, it is permissible to:

- Say Subhanallah (for men) or
- Gesture to prevent the person from passing

A woman will ward off a passerby without raising her voice.

Permissible in the Prayer

Wearing a belt around the waist

Carrying a sword or similar item, provided it is not distracting.

Praying while facing:

- A copy of the Qur'an,
- A sword,
- The back of a seated person (even if quietly speaking),
- A candle or lamp

Permissible in the Prayer

Killing a snake or scorpion if harm is feared, with no more than two strikes, even if slight movement away from the qiblah is required.

Praying on carpets, rugs, or similar coverings.

Breaking the Prayer

Permissible to Break the Prayer

To protect property of value, even if it belongs to someone else

A shepherd can break the prayer if a wolf threatens the flock

Breaking the Prayer

Obligatory (Wajib) to Break the Prayer

When responding to a genuine emergency or call for help

If there is reasonable fear that someone may be seriously harmed, such as:

- A blind person falling into a well
- Similar situations involving imminent danger

Delaying Prayer Due to Necessity

A midwife may delay the prayer, even until after its time, if concerned for the safety of the mother or baby during childbirth

The same ruling applies to a traveler who fears attack from highway robbers

Abandoning the Prayer

A person who intentionally abandons the prayer out of laziness is subject to disciplinary punishment by the Islamic authority until he resumes praying

Beaten until he bleeds, and then imprisoned until he resumes praying

The same ruling applies to one who does not fast in Ramadhan
